

Homework – How will my child benefit?

No child likes the thought of having to do homework, but children can benefit from it in several ways.

Increased learning:

- By reviewing the class work they are increasing the possibility of being able to remember what has been taught.
- By working things out on their own they are developing their thinking and learning skills.
- Project work helps them develop the skill of finding information and selecting what they need.
- Practice makes perfect! Children often need to practice the skills they learned in class.

Self-esteem:

- By taking the time to produce a good piece of work children come to understand what they are capable of.
- By helping your child with homework you are showing them how important learning is.
- If your child is struggling with the work you can let the teacher know and try to resolve the problem
